

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

June, 2013

Global Factories MDM (Medication Detection Machine) now interfaced to all major Tablet Packaging Machines.

Multi-dose packaging verification recognized as an important step in error prevention.

(June 2013) Crocus is pleased to announce that it has now interfaced the Global Factories MDM (Medication Detection Machine), to all leading providers of ATP (Automated Tablet Packaging) machines, including: Tosho, Sanyo, Yuyama, Takazono, Cretem and JV-Medi machines. In addition to these successful interfaces, the MDM now also reads all forms of barcode styles, including Aztec .

Crocus was the first company to introduce a pouch verification system to the American market. Since this time, MDM technology, which has been in use for over eight years around the world, has been implemented in 8 sites across the United States. MDM remains the only patented medication detection machine available today, verifying over 1 Million pouches a day worldwide.

“We are thrilled that our message on patient safety with a focus on pouch verification is getting through to American pharmacists.” states Crocus Medical. In addition, Crocus has also remained in a vendor neutral position, ensuring the most advanced technology be available to anyone committed to patient safety, regardless of what tablet packaging machine they are using.”

Introducing the Global Factories unit to the United States demonstrates our continued commitment to bringing the latest and greatest in medication safety systems to our customers. You can always be assured that Crocus is on the forefront of patient safety with respect to medication error prevention,
